DAYLIGHT SAVINGS

Here are some friendly tips to help your child transition into a new schedule when the clocks spring forward on March 10.

- Gradually change bedtimes forward in 15 minute increments every few days a week or two before the time changes.
- The blue light from devices with screens can effect a child's melatonin production & circadian rhythm, so try to avoid screen time before bed.

- Continue with your child's regular bedtime routine.
- To help prompt sleep with it being lighter outside, darken your child's bedroom completely. Blackout curtains are a wonderful way to block out light.
- A white noise machine is a great solution to drown out distracting outside noises such as birds chirping and traffic.

Hopefully these tips will make your child's/children's transition easier at home and at school!

We hope everyone has a safe and relaxing March Break!
